

Ottawa, Week by Week

(By M. L. SCHWARTZ)

If Trouble Comes

A veteran observer can detect now behind the scenes in this nation's capital a tense, loaded atmosphere resulting from current exciting developments in the international sphere, and the people across this country ought to know that all-important diplomatic discussions—particularly between Washington and Ottawa—are going on in such a way as to hint, though not always publicly, not only about regional defence pacts in case of war, but about extension of armed co-operation between the United States and Canada and the Western European countries.

While these are supposed to be polite, diplomatic discussions on our freedom and the right to our security arrangements, yet exciting activities in Ottawa and Washington, involving the Canadian Ambassador in the U.S. capital as well as top officials of the Canadian External Affairs Department here, suggest the seriousness of the whole situation now and the importance of these talks.

Furthermore, for the man-in-the-street unaccustomed to diplomatic manners of such dealings it may not mean as much as to a veteran observer along Parliament Hill. However, he can be assured, significantly enough, that there is no longer any great effort being made along Parliament Hill to conceal the purpose of these discussions or exchange of views, other about United States-Canadian co-operation on defence on a regional basis in this hemisphere, or their association with the Western European security arrangements. Everything is more and more in the open now, with this being extremely important.

In fact, External Affairs Minister St. Laurent has gone on record here with a declaration which hints of things to come, when he said that "there is no paper agreement, but we are potential allies if trouble comes," openly stating that the world is not satisfied with the "helpless, frustrated and hemmed in Security Council which is prevented from taking actions required for security," and that "Canada has working agreement with the United States," so that "a threat to one of us is a threat to the hemisphere which neither will pass by."

In addition, Defence Minister Claxton has made a blunt statement here that "the United States and Canada have a common interest and a common defence, and we can solve our problems and achieve our ends better together than we can alone," emphasizing at the same time that "our common interest is that of the preservation of our freedom and the right to our own way of life on this continent without interference from any nation." It should not be difficult to guess what both spokesmen for the Canadian Government, and whom they were suggesting as possible enemies "if trouble comes." And Canada and her allies will be ready "if trouble comes," in the interpretation here in this capital about the present discussion on the diplomatic, even if not to the governmental level.

Don't Expect Too Much

It is no longer any secret that taxpayers across this country are dreaming about some sensational cuts in the Canadian Government's tax bill, because the federal about the present discussion on the diplomatic, even if not to the governmental level.

spring an appeal to the people at the same time as sensational tax cuts.

However, this may turn out to be really a dream for many taxpayers depending too much upon these reports or interpretations of policy leading from observations "on the spot" in this capital. More and more social security measures are in the making in Canada. It is stressed in well-informed quarters here that so high tax levels are likely to accompany such plans. Already the Government here has to face large sums in payment for old age pensions, for obligations under the broad Veterans' Charter, for family allowances which cost this year alone $267 millions, social security measures which cost more than $1 billion spent ever before in history—and more are coming—so that a high tax level is bound to be a fact of life. It has generally considered likely in pre-war days, when surpluses were recorded on a proportional basis, in face of reports about sensational tax cuts being kept ready for "election year," according to observations here.

"Naturally the criterion to which may be considered advisable to re-emphasize on price control, will govern the number of employees in the type of organization which the board will have to maintain," said Finance Minister Abbott when he was asked about reimposition of controls, to keep under limitations the rise in the cost of living, disclosing that that whereas at April 1, 1947 the staff of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board was 3,920, yet $1,277, Mr. Abbott stated that "my ceilings which may be reimposed will be very limited."

Sales of New Cars

The latest official information here shows that the sales of new cars in Canada dropped to 10,688 units, valued at $21,077,628 in May, as against 11,603 units at $22,109,940 in April, and 13,492 at $25,581,105 in March, though 7,386 trucks and buses were sold in March, 7,494 in April, and 7,720 in May. In other words, for the second consecutive month, said, new motor vehicles have declined.

Said In The Capital

"I shall still remain in the office of prime minister," said Premier King, making clear the difference between leadership of a party and leadership of a government, with the former post being given to him by the party, but the latter by the Crown, suggesting that it might be "two or three months" after the party convention here before he would be giving up the post of prime minister.

"We're on the march," said C.C.F. leader M. J. Coldwell at a Victory Banquet here, celebrating recent by-election victories of his party.

"Canada is not striving to become a self-sufficient nation, shutting off the rest of the world from her markets," stressed Mackinnon, Minister of Mines and Resources, in an address in this capital.

"As a soldier, I would welcome more expenditures on the Air Force," stated Major-General G. E. Pearson, M.P., Y.C., Minister of National Defence.

"In every year of the last 60 years, we have had an unfavorable balance of trade with the United States, and the total unfavorable balance or loss on our American trade in 50 years has been over $10 billions," said Hon. John Bracken.

The Canadian wool output in 1947 totaled 141 million pounds, the lowest in 18 years. That total represents only 16 per cent of total domestic disappearance.

Hot kept cool during hot weather will let better and gain faster. Hops do not have great claims on required sample shade and an abundance of water.

Wedding Bells

Morlock—Hein

A wedding of interest to many friends in Delia and Hanna was quietly solemnized in the Redeemer Lutheran Church in Hanna, at 4:30 p.m. on June 20, when Esther Hein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. August Hein of Hanna, became the bride of Edgar Edvard Morlock, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Morlock of Delia.

Rev. H. J. C. Brant was the officiating clergyman, and the wedding music was played by Miss Laura Henton.

The bride wore a white satin traditional wedding gown with nylon top, and carried a bouquet of red roses. Her only flower girl was a gold heart-shaped object, a gift of the groom.

Miss Pauline Hein, only sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, wearing a floor length gown of blue tulle.

The best man was the groom's youngest brother, Mr. Benjamin Morlock.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents for a large number of guests.

The bride's mother chose for the occasion a dress of white tulle and tulle, with a long train. Both have their good and had plenty, but the bride is definitely superior in the wearing of the dress, in season of average rainfall, or less, the bride is definitely more satisfactory, although the one was wearing a better wedding suit to the second.

The first summerfall wedding should take place immediately after ending has been completed on the remainder of the year. Despite the late season this year some farmers were able to make the first stroke on the ground, and obtain a satisfactory yield well before the banking June rains came along.

In making the first stroke with the blade is often advised to add extra weight in order that the cultivation may be made as shallow as possible while still keeping the blade below the surface. Without the added weight it may be necessary to cut deeper than is desirable in order to keep the machine in the ground. Providing the ground is not too hard, the rounded edge of the blade should be used for subsequent strokes.

By getting on the land with the blade as soon after a storm as possible, the chances of the soil being better than if blading is delayed until the surface is completely dry, at which stage the next storm may not be far away.

Generally speaking, if the one way is used for summerfallowing it would be more easy, later cultivation, and made with a later cultivator or a rod weeder.

Whatever method is employed, the following objects of summerfallowing should be kept in mind: Moisture conservation, weed control, maintenance of trash cover, and soil erosion control.

A soil thought. Farming is a real hard job. Summerfallowing is more subject to erosion in winter and spring than in summer.

If fallow has insufficient trash cover in the fall they should be covered with straw, or a cover crop if the land slopes in such a way that wind water will sweep the soil away.

Summerfallow

Lethbridge Experimental Station Weekly Letter

This is not a review of the highly entertaining and instructive C.B.C. programme of the same name each week, by the way, should be equally interesting to the housewife as to the farmer. No, it is merely a mention of a very important phase of the dryland farmer's year.

The prime object of summerfallowing should be to conserve moisture. Prudent growth, whether it be in the form of economic crops or of the weeds, uses up moisture. Moisture conservation and weed control therefore go hand in hand.

But there is more to summerfallowing than killing weeds. For example, in the process of destroying weeds, the surface of the soil is exposed to the ravage of erosion by wind and water. Soil that looks like a hard crust of rock to lay down can be lost in a few fleeting minutes if it is left unprotected. This brings up the subject of cultivating the surface of the soil to conserve moisture.

Here in Southern Alberta the most common implements in use are the blade and the moldboard. Both have their good and bad points, but the blade is definitely superior in the wearing of the dress, in season of average rainfall, or less, the blade is definitely more satisfactory, although the one was wearing a better wedding suit to the second.

The first summerfall wedding should take place immediately after ending has been completed on the remainder of the year. Despite the late season this year some farmers were able to make the first stroke on the ground, and obtain a satisfactory yield well before the banking June rains came along.

PRAIRIES' TECHNICAL HEAD

ROY D. CARHOUN, recently appointed chief engineer in the C.B.C.'s Prairie Region, is headquartered at Winnipeg, was talking with a German magnetic tape recorder during a tour of Canadian Army Broadcasting stations in 1945, when a picture was taken. This recorder was the latest thing of its kind in 1946, and Canadian and American engineers have since done a great deal of research based on it.
